

30 YEARS OF THE GALLERY!

Galerie La Forest Divonne is celebrating its 30th anniversary.

In May 1988, at the age of 29, Marie-Hélène de La Forest Divonne opened Galerie Vieille du Temple at the heart of Paris' Marais district, then in the midst of renewal. She would remain there for 27 years, before crossing the Seine in 2015 in order to expand, taking over the premises of Galerie Albert Loeb at 12 Rue des Beaux-Arts. The change of address not surprisingly went hand in hand with a change in name to become Galerie La Forest Divonne.

In 2016, Jean de Malherbe, her son, opened a large exhibition space in Brussels, the gallery's second establishment. At the age of 29 (as well), he left Réunion des musées nationaux (Rmn-Grand Palais) to develop the gallery's international presence as an associate, and to open it up to the coming generations.

In September 2018, together they will celebrate 30 years of the gallery. The anniversary will be marked by a major event in Paris and the publication of a book covering the 250 exhibitions the gallery has held since 1988.

Between Paris and Brussels, Galerie La Forest Divonne today organizes a dozen exhibitions per year, not including the art fairs. This enables it to represent some twenty artists of all generation (currently aged 27 to 90), whose disciplines range from installations to drawing, covering all expression of the visual arts. From historical figures like Lucien Hervé in photography, or Vincent Bioulès, Pierre Buraglio and Jean-Michel Meurice for the Support-Surface years, to younger artists such as Arthur Aillaud, Jérôme Bryon, David Décamp and Illés Sarkanty. The gallery's prime references also include the painters Alexandre Hollan, Jeff Kowatch and Guy de Malherbe. The Project Room launched in Brussels opens up the gallery's programming to emerging artists like Pauline Sarrus and the Elsa & Johanna duo made up of Elsa Parra and Johanna Benaïnos, whose first solo show will be presented this year rue des Beaux Arts.

"This anniversary comes at a time when the gallery is developing particularly quickly: enlargement in Paris, expansion to Brussels, with a reinforced team that has allowed us to produce a dozen exhibitions per year and to make our artists better known in France and abroad to an increasing public."
